ART AUCTION OF THE DECADE

Help Style and the Everard Read Gallery save the black rhino

Time is running out for the black rhino. There are fewer than 3 500 left. In the fight to save it from extinction, some of the country's top artists have created paintings and sculptures of the rhino for auction at the Everard Read Gallery on November 22 at 6pm.

You can see their rhinos on the following 10 pages: a collection of artworks that form a heartbreaking tribute to one of Africa's most magnificent endangered creatures.

All proceeds of the auction are going towards the Rhino and Elephant Foundation, which is fighting the battle against poachers all over southern Africa.

Auctioneer Donald Martin of Westgate Walding, a member of the Rhino and Elephant Foundation, is giving his services free. Refreshments were donated by Thrupps and wine by Bellingham, the marquee by Ginsberg's and artworks have been transported free of charge by Danzas.

So every cent of the funds raised – and that includes the R20 ticket fee – will go towards the struggle.

How much money we raise depends on you. This is your chance to help save the rhino and at the same time acquire an artwork that will become an historic piece of Africana.

The rhinos can be viewed at the gallery there on November 18, 20, 21 and 22, and bidding slips are available for those who cannot attend the auction.

If you don't buy a rhino, please send a donation to the Rhino and Elephant Foundation, Box 381, Bedfordview, 2008. Remember: if we can't care for our animals, what hope is there for the human race?
